Safe Transport of Lithium Batteries by Air

28 October 2015, Singapore Aviation Academy

With many lives and businesses depending on air transportation today, safety in the aviation industry remains of paramount importance. Ensuring that Singapore adheres to international safety standards and best practices, CAAS continues to drive the highest standards of safety. Working with industry partners like you, we seek to promote a strong safety culture and embed a robust safety framework through greater collaboration and engagement with the aviation community.

We are pleased to invite you to the next CAAS Safety Series Seminar on “Safe Transport of Lithium Batteries by Air”. Jointly organised by CAAS, SATS and Lufthansa Cargo, the seminar aims to update the industry on the significant changes to the lithium battery regulations in recent years. You will acquire an awareness of the inherent risk of lithium batteries and understand the requirements associated with the safe transport of lithium batteries by air.

We look forward to your presence and active participation in the CAAS Safety Series seminar.

About the CAAS Safety Series

CAAS seeks to promote a strong safety culture and embed a robust safety framework through greater collaboration and engagement with the aviation community. The CAAS Safety Series was therefore launched in early 2011 as a platform to better engage the aviation industry on developments in safety policies and regulations as well as new initiatives from the industry. The Series comprises a mix of talks, workshops or seminars on topical issues related to aviation safety. Please visit www.caas.gov.sg for the calendar of events.
